MOSAIC WORKSHOP AT SCHOOL
Students have been very enthusiastic in their mosaic creation. Sandra and David Robertson of OzMosaics have spent a week instructing our students and community members in the development of a mosaic mural as a centenary commemorative project. This involved a wide range of techniques with all who were involved being enthralled with the emergence of some great artworks.

Thanks to all who worked so hard to finalise the grouting of the finished work. It was a major project with many hours of on the job training.

As you can see from this photo of a portion of the nearly finished mural, there is a great deal of interesting detail in the colourful creation.

SCHOOLS VISIT MUNDUBBERA
Last week we had staff from 5 other P-10 schools visit Mundubbera to observe teaching practice and be in-serviced by Ex Assistant Director General Yvana Jones. I believe our teachers and students did an amazing job showcasing best practice in a number of areas of schooling. This is one of the strategies we are working on to improve our Explicit Instruction procedures. Big thanks to Mr Van Elst, Miss O’Kelly and Mrs Enchelmaier for letting the 20 adults into your classrooms. It was also very heartening to see our students practising their ‘Confidence’ with our visitors by greeting them and engaging them with eye contact.

Facebook - friend or foe it’s here to stay

Parents as primary caregivers and at home educators have an important role to play in helping kids navigate the social media landscape.

Article contributed by Denis Masseni

There is nothing more divisive for parents today than a discussion about Facebook. With close on 11 million Australians now using Facebook, it has a participation rate like no other product or service. With around 75% of 15 to 65 year olds using Facebook there must be some redeeming value. There are more Facebook users than there are taxpayers. Facebook is the most significant communication device since the telephone, so why the hysteria?

We digest our information via the media, which just loves a controversy. You’ll never see an article that reads, “Grandparents stay in touch on Facebook with travelling grandchildren” or “Teacher connects with old U.K colleagues after 20 years – found them on Facebook”. Instead we see articles such as “Australia The World’s Facebook Bullying Capital” (news.com.au January 18). Yes, there are dangers but like the gun lobby’s catch cry “Guns don’t kill people, people kill people”, in the hands of the naïve or evil it can also be destructive.

The single biggest issue stemming from inappropriate use of Facebook is that kids don’t realise they’re now global publishers. And in this space there are rules and laws. However we are in an era where online law is lagging but it is quickly catching up. In the future highly inflammatory and derogatory publishing that some people engage in will be reigned in, but in the meantime, we need to help our kids.

Here are a few tips about how to guide kids through social media.

1. Teach appropriate language
   Kids need guidelines regarding the language they use online.
   Here’s a simple guide for kids of all ages: “Don’t use language online that you wouldn’t use in front of your grandmother”.
   Language does get bluer as kids get older but Facebook seems to have lowered this threshold dramatically. Talk to kids about the appropriateness of the language they use on Facebook.

2. Limit friend acceptances and limit exposure to strangers
   Young people collect Facebook friends like swap cards, which is not good practice. Being indiscriminate as to whom they befriend leaves kids open to the potential of being targeted by undesirable adults. It is more appropriate that their Facebook friends mirror their ‘real’ life friends.

3. Photos can last forever
   More than 250 million photos are uploaded each day on Facebook, making sharing pictures the most popular activity. Some young people do place risqué pictures of themselves on Facebook. The central issue here involves the protection of the user’s reputation, which can be wrecked by one inappropriate photo spread around cyberspace via Facebook.

4. Time on Facebook – encourage moderate use
   We want our children to have a balanced life with a variety of activities both indoors and outdoors. We also know that they need plenty of face-to-face interactions so they can maintain social connections. The addictive nature of social media means that some kids spend far too much time on Facebook. Late night log-ins on a school night are not in kids’ long term best interest and require parent discussion and negotiation to help kids find a balance.

It’s difficult as parents to work out our role when kids use Facebook. Being their ‘friend’ is not the answer. Neither is letting kids do as they please online. Our kids need our sensibilities and wisdom as parents to help guide them in the social media world, and create a safe culture of use.
